HAPPENING NOW: Civil Societies Challenging PH Politics in the New Age of People Power

The ongoing impeachment of Sara Duterte from the Vice-President position has spurred widespread attention from the media and the people across the whole country. Around 215 lawmakers from the House of Representatives filed complaints toward the impeachment, with notable officials including Ilocos Norte representative Sandro Marcos and House Speaker Martin Romualdez. Yet, despite this overwhelming number of complaints, both the Congress and the Senate have placed the initiation of the impeachment trial process of VP Duterte on hold to give way for the campaign period for the 2025 midterm elections. With this issue coinciding the midterms whilst adding to the development of the breakup between the Marcos-Duterte uniteam tandem, it begs the question as to how this impacts the current political landscape of Philippine civil society.

The current setback done in the legislative department of the government could possibly be putting more fire into the already opposing political camps of Marcos and Duterte. Civil society is wholly affected by this current political stronghold as the agenda may be for the parties of current incumbents to win again in the 2025 midterms. The tensions between both political camps have amassed movements from the youth alike in order to push for the continuation of Duterte's impeachment trial to proceed in court. With this, it is also worth noting that this collective action from the masses has instilled within the Filipino people the integrity towards the freedom of expression towards the actions of the Malacañang. Additionally, political leaders and critics have also not held back towards the setback done by the current Senate line-up on the impeachment trial.

Running Senatorial candidate Leila de Lima expressed as well that the Senate shall, based on the 1987 constitution, "forthwith follow immediately with the impeachment case". Furthermore, other Senate hopefuls such as Kiko Pangilinan have voiced out that "he is willing to set aside politics in order to work President Marcos in attaining the Php 20 price for rice which was promised in Marcos' 2022 electoral campaign bid for the Presidency".

With the persisting issue of democratic consolidation and political accountability towards the people on the line, the UP Association of Political Science Majors hopes to foster an understanding between legislative dynamics and how it is impacted by the public opinion and mass movements of the Filipino people. With this, the organization's flagship event will be entitled Dalubbanwahan 2025 titled "HAPPENING NOW: Civil Societies Challenging PH Politics in the New Age of People Power." The online lecture series will be catering towards high school teachers. The lecture series will comprise of the following topics: TUNAY: History of Civil Societies in Shaping PH Politics, PALABAN: Civil societies as the true and genuine opposition, and MAKABAYAN: The role of civil societies in the impeachment of Sara Duterte and the continuous resistance against tyranny. The following topics will explore the political dynamics behind Filipino civil society as a whole and how they drive local politics through their mass movements and their freedom of expression towards justice and wage rights. The lecture series hopes to provide high school teachers an understanding towards these political dynamics in order to provide different perceptions of civil societies' views on political pressures done by issues like the ongoing vice-presidential impeachment case.

1. TUNAY: History of civil societies in shaping PH Politics

Civil societies and organizations play a crucial part in shaping the course of history of the Philippines. From staging a peaceful revolution to oust a dictator, doing it again during EDSA Dos, crying out for the victims of extrajudicial killing, holding the line for frontliners during the pandemic to never ceasing to fight and struggle for human rights and good governance. Indeed, the long history of the people's resistance to tyranny determines the essence of our democracy. With another remarkable feat to the people's agenda that is the impeachment of Vice President Sara Duterte, it makes knowing our civil societies' history all the more relevant and crucial in determining its trajectory, trends, and why it has even been sustained from the beginning.

2. PALABAN: Civil societies as the true and genuine opposition

Current senatorial candidates Kiko Pangilinan and Bam Aquino, more popularly known as KikoBam since the 2022 elections, have just recently dropped the image of being the oppositions for the upcoming midterm elections. It caused various questions to arise, one of them being whether or not it is a strategic call to defy the communist connotation and penetrate the legislative arena or simply an act of cowardice of so-called public servants who compromise their principles at the height of the elections' make or break. Whether or not these are true, what remains severely affected is the masses that always find itself in the place of undemocratic elections. It is an even bigger hurdle to face, and knowing what might be the truest and most genuine opposition in our time of resistance could be the answer.

3. MAKABAYAN: The role of civil societies in the impeachment of Sara Duterte and the continuous resistance against tyranny

With the recent news of the impeachment of Vice President Sara Duterte in the House of Representatives, the call to expand public alliances within the general masses is one that needs to be answered now more than ever. The Makabayan Bloc, filing the second impeachment complaint against Sara Duterte, proved not only to be the representative of the people in legislation, but even a continuing ally as it becomes a coalition resounding in the current midterm elections campaign. Various civil society organizations such as Gabriela, Kabataan Partylist, BAYAN MUNA, ACT Teachers, PAMALAKAYA, Kilusang Magsasaka and more are gradually becoming the clearer representation of the people's genuine agenda. It traverses the years of fighting for the people's sectors, and is now rooting to bring this fight to the bigger stage. It goes to show that civil societies carry the impact wherever it goes as long as it carries equally the genuine interests of the people.
